Privacy Good Research Fund

June 2015: Launched with $75,000 seeking to:

- capitalise on existing privacy research capacity in academic and non-profit sectors
- generate new knowledge and support the development of privacy expertise
- increase NZ privacy awareness and understanding
- promote uptake and application of research results by relevant stakeholders.

First round fairly open-ended with encouragement for projects to assist with 'making privacy easy' for agencies or individuals or to contribute to 'Better Public Services'

November 2015: 4 projects approved for funding

Mid-2016 onwards: projects gradually completing, announced by researchers themselves, OPC blogging on each from late 2016

December 2016: OPC Privacy Research Symposium to disseminate results

Privacy Research Symposium

- Morning entirely devoted to the completed PGRF projects
- Beyond those 4 projects we have added several hours in the afternoon to give a taste of broader research capacity, other recent privacy research and the diversity of privacy research disciplines and activity:
 - We'll hear from an overseas researcher, two privacy institutions (OPC and GCPO) and two institutions commissioning research (NZLF and DHS)
 - I particularly welcome presenters who have travelled from Australia and the USA specifically for this event
 - We're grateful for a number of distinguished individuals with strong research credentials rounding out the picture by introducing the speakers or providing closing remarks: including people from 5 NZ universities and 2 overseas universities

We're about to start

- If you've not yet switched mobiles to silent, please do so
- We've much to get through and I'd ask speakers and session moderators to finish by allocated time and following speakers and moderators to move promptly into place
- All presenters in the main sessions have been asked to leave plenty of time for Q&A, and the venue was chosen to facilitate interaction, so we encourage all participants to be ready with comments and questions
